Bishop O'Connor Makes Many Changes in

Hasn't Been Consulted About the Equitable Affa'r, but He's Sure He Won't Succeed Secretary Hay-However, He Says, He's Free to Fill Any Place.

Joseph H. Choate, no longer Ambassador, but plain American citizen and heartily glad of it, is back to his own country, and, as he said himself, delighted to be back. He arrived on the Cunarder Caronia—the same steamer which Mrs. Choate herself hantized when it was launched-and went straight up into the Berkshires, where at his country home at Woodstock he is to take a brief rest, and, presumably, go into training for welcoming festivities.

The Caronia, which sailed from Liverpool on the 31st of May, reached her dock at the foot of James street about 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Mr. Choate's son, Joseph H. Choate, Jr., and a few more intimate friends were waiting to meet Mr. and Mrs. Choate and their daughter Mabel as they came down the gangplank. It was purely a family affair. There were no delegations, no addresses, no formal functions of any kind. Mr. Choate didn't seem dissatisfied at this.

Mr. Choats looked a trifle stouter than when he went away. His face was a little fuller and rosier and the tan of the sea voyage was still on it. He wore a dark overcoat, unbuttoned and thrown back over his light gray suit of traveling clothes, and a soft, light colored Fadora hat. The old-time fun and keenness were in his eye as he glanced about him, and all in all he was about as marked a specimen of hale and hearly vigor as any of his fellow pas-

Into the hands of the photographers he surrendered himself without a protest. They placed him here and placed him there at their own sweet will and he resignedly submitted, all the time keeping fast hold of the hand of a very pretty and very much flustered miss of about 8 years -Josephine De Gersdorff, Mr. Choate's grandniece-whom he insisted on having photographed standing close by his side. Mr. Choate talked frankly and cordially to his interviewers. About the first thing he said was that he was delighted to be back home once more. Mrs. Choate and Miss Choate smiled hearty indorsement of this sentiment.

"No." said Mr. Choate in response to one of the first questions. "I have not heard from Mr. Reid since I sailed—have not been in wireless communication with him. But I have heard of his hearty reception in England. It is what I knew he would receive. I know, too, that he will have a pleasant solours, there. pleasant sojourn there.

"But what's the news, anyway?" said Mr. Choate, turning questioner himself.

"Lots of things must have happened since I left England. Has the war ended yet? No? I hope to heaven that it soon will end. What am I going to do now that I'm home? Well. Mrs. Choate wants me for home consumption for a while, and I am going to devote my time mostly to her. As to what occupation I may devote myself to, well. I may resume the practise of law, or I may go into divinity. I might get along as a preacher. What do you think about it? What do you advise me?

"As to Mr. Roosevelt's position in favor of a great navy, I have always been in favor of a great navy, I have always been in favor of our having a strong navy. Should it be as strong as England's? Well, I don't know as to that, but we should have a strong

"You ingenious gentlemen of the press," replied Mr. Choate, "are capable of suggesting almost anything. But I might as well say that I suppose I am free to fill any place I please."

A little later on Mr. Choate was asked shout a rither that he was coming home.

A little later on Mr. Choate was asked about a rumor that he was coming home to take Mr. Hay's place as Secretary of State. To this he replied by saying again that Mr. Hay was entirely restored to health, that he was sailing for home and that such a rumor was utterly untrue. Then he asked jokingly if any Russian loans had been placed in New York and insisted again and again on having his questioners tell him things.

and again on having his questioners tell him things.

"The news, that's what I want," he said.
"Come, gentlemen, tell me the news."

"Well, Mr. Choate," said one of the interviewers, driven to bay at last, "there is one bit of news I suppose you ought to be told. The Giants have won!"

"Good for the Giants! Now we are getting down to business at last."

The Bar Association is making elaborate preparation for the reception to Mr. Choate, which will be held in the clubhouse on the evening of June 15. Invitations have been sent to the President and members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Judges of the Court of Appeals, the Justices of the State Supreme Court, the Federal Judges of the Second Circuit, the British Ambassador and Consul-General ritish Ambassador and Consul-General New York and other distinguished men. r. #### EDUCATION OF CONVICTS. Prison Officials Decide to Turn It Over to the Education Department. ALBANY, June 7 .- State Superintendent of Prisons C. V. Collins and the State prison wardens at a meeting here to-day decided that the education of prisoners in the State prisons and the Eastern New York Reformatory at Napanoch shall be turned over to the State Education Department and that the prison schools shall hereafter be conducted under the direction of the chaplain of the prisons, with convict teachers as far as possible, and under the management of the State department.

It is intended to make the schooling of illiterate convicts and those unable to speak the English language compulsory, and all convicts coming under these heads will be sent to school in prefernce to being put to work in the prison industries. It is intended to teach the common school branches and to manage the schools on much the same plan as are those conducted by the State for Indian children.

The number of foreigners in prison who need the schooling has not shown any increase since 1880, but it is estimated that the number of such convicts is about 10 per cent. of the total prison population, while the foreign prison population is about 20 per cent. of the total.

In most of the dog hospitals there is a rule against admitting women to the wards. No small part of the science of doctoring dogs lies in keeping them cheerful away from home. The sight of a woman seems to make them think of home and the fireside; they get excited when a skirt blows in sight, and correspondingly depressed when it disappears. So no dog doctor who understands dog psychology lets his patients see a woman if he can help it.

Jim Davis, who only a few years ago was one of the best known detectives on the force, resigned his job one day and for two years afterward took all his own time and most of that of his friends in trying for reinstatement. He spent part of this interval in an uptown restaurant, and alinterval in an uptown restaurant, and although he further enlarged his acquaintance it was not possible for him to recover his place. On the recommendation of Commissioner McAdoo, however, ne was made the chief of the new police department which is to be formed at Panama and sailed for his destination the other day.

"Any man," said the Reformed Absorber, "can be cured of a weakness for a special intoxicant. I know, for I had one. My pet drink was brandy, and I was no good in the morning until I had at least a couple of stiffeners. Fortunately for me, I had a wife who was fond of me. I had my own bedroom, and one morning it seemed to me as if the atmosphere as well as the pillows and the bed clothes smelled of brandy.

"There was a bottle of brandy on a small table near the head of the bed, but the cork was in tight. On the same table was a pitcher of loe water. I took a gulp from it and it tasted of brandy, but so weak that it gave me q alms. It seemed to me that the ome et at breakfast and even the coffee tasted of brandy.

"In the train, on the way to my office, I found myself sniffing at my handkerchief; it smelled of brandy. I began to get alarmed, and said to myself: 'The stuff must be coming through my pores." I didn't have much of an appetite, and waited until I got home for dinner. Every bite and sup I took tasted of brandy.

"My wife kept the secret for two years; and then confessed that the family doctor had advised her to spray my room and my clothes and my food and my drink with brandy."

Many of the uptown restaurants profit by an adoption of the club idea. When the regulars have established their financial the regulars have established their mandial solidity, the diner simply signs his check as though he were in his club.

Many young men who live well up to their incomes find the idea convenient, and the restaurant profits by the fact that a ration frequently orders a dollar and a half dinner when a third of that sum would have to suffice were an immediate payment expected. In one uptown restaurant four-fifths of the tables are reserved for regular natrons.

It seems that the barber must rubber. It is undeniably annoying to have him, with razor or scissors in hand, turn to glance at every new arrival.

"We have to do that, sir," one of them said yesterday, "if we want to keep our own customers. No other barber in the place would ever put a new arrival at his ease by telling him to sit down or letting him know when his turn is to come. They are all too jealous to look after other men's customers. That's the reason we all have to look at every man who comes in."

"You tell me President Roosevelt is moving in the direction of peace in the Far East. I heartily wish him luck in his efforts. I shall perhaps know more about it when I have seen him.

"I did not see Secretary Hay. He arrived in London the day after I left. But I have had letters from him and I understand he is entirely restored to health."

Mr. Choate was then told that his name had been mentioned in connection with the chairmanship of the Equitable board, and he was asked about it.

"Such an exaltation," he replied, laughingly, "is furthest from my ambition. I have not even been consulted about it wet."

"I have not even been consulted about it with the direction of peace in the Far That Mr. Conried is a generous manager he frequently demonstrates. All his lieutenants on the Western tour of the company received presents of money on their return to the city, and very generous presents they were. Now Mr. Conried is going to present Lillian Heidelbach to the notice of European managers. She was one of the members of the opera school and made periodic appearances on the stage of the Metropolitan, only to return to that nest and be lost for a time. She is regarded as an authentic, genuine product of the school, and Mr. Conried is willing to allow the foreign

No phenomenon of city life changes the summer aspect of the streets so much as the caretakers' children. They descend on the quiet neighborhoods and the sounds of their play make a music unfamiliar in such parts of the city. Persons accustomed to the winter quiet are not able to enjoy the novelty and find the noise of baseball and hockey unwelcome. Baseball usually pre-vails from the close of school hours until dark, in spite of the protests of neighbors. In several cases recently the assistance of the police has been asked.

The superintendent of the workhouse received a shock the other day when he was informed that $577, in bills ranging in denomination from $1 to $5, had been in denomination from $1 to $5, had been found in the possession of an old man who had just been committed to that institution on a charge of vagrancy. The discovery was made when the new arrival was compelled to take a bath. He carried the money in a flimsy belt worn next the skin. Some of the bills, which he confessed to having carried constantly in that way for seventeen years, crumbled to pieces at a touch. It was tainted money with a vengeance.

Brennan, $660 salary as manager and for money expended for her account between March 23 and May 12, 1903; G. W. Schafer, $500 for household supplies in 1904 and 1905; Joseph J. McCarthy, $206 for services and money expended between April 1 and April 29, 1903; Van Horn & Son, $120 for costumes, 1904-05; Alfred D. Moulton, $90 for carriage hire, 1904-05; Lord & Taylor, $80 for clothing, 1904-05; Charles T. Jones, $80 for clothing, 1904-05, and Glen Macdonough, royalt'es, amount unknown.

Most of Mrs. Le Moyne's debts were contracted while she was a star in "Among Those Present," at the Garden Theater two years ago. She has recently made a short tour in Browning's play, "The Blot on the 'Scutcheon." This venture was thought to have been successful. Mrs. Le Moyne is one of the best known of the older actresses and made her reputation as a reader of Browning and Shakespeare. Her fame as an elocutionist is so great that it was she who was called upon to deliver the dedication ode at the Chicago World's Fair. She is the wife of W. J. Le Moyne, the veteran actor, who has not appeared on the stage in some time because of ill health.

Charles Burnham Will Play Scapegoat Today While Writs Are Sued Out-"Only Oscar's" Multiple Role-Tony Pastor Stirs Up Magistrate Pool's Memories.

Thirteen of the twenty-two theater managers who were held for conspiracy against James S. Metcalfe by Magistrate Pool appeared before him in the West Side court yesterday afternoon to give bonds for their appearance for trial. It is the intention of the District Attorney's office to make a test case against one man.

Ex-District Attorney Olcott, of counsel for the defendants, when he met Magistrate Pool yesterday said: "I want to apologize to your Honor for the failure of these men to come here ye terday. Since the District Attorney intends to make a test case of one of these cases I thought it would not be necessary for them all to come to court, but just the one man. I supposed I was carrying out your ideas in making such arrangements with the District Attorney.

Magistrate Pool replied with a smile: "I never had any intention of arresting you fellows. That was all a mistake. This case must be conducted regularly, however, so I will have to issue a warrant against one of your members and have him arrested. Then you can go ahead and get Charles Burnham of Wallack's Theater is the man selected to play the scapegoat. He will appear at the West Side court this morning and be served with a warrant. While he remains in durance, which in this case will be in the Magistrate's private room, the counsel for the defendants will get out write of babeas corpus and certiorari and the case will be taken immediately to the Supreme Court. No matter which side wins, the case will probably be carried to the Appellate Court.

As the managers came into court yesterday they were sent to the Magistrate's room, until the place looked like the annual convention of theater managers. When the bonds were ready the Magistrate went back to sign them. Oscar Hammerstein's name appeared on so many bonds that Magistrate Pool exclaimed: "How many Oscars are there?"

"I am the only Oscar," said Hammerstein; stepping forward.

"What are you—a bondsman or what?"
asked the Magistrate.

"I am both bondsman and criminal,"
replied Oscar with a smile.

Pastor said he was.

"Well, you have been in the business a long time," replied Magistrate Pool. "When did you start the theater?"

"Fifty years ago, when you were a boy," was the reply. Then Mr. Pastor went on:

"You ought to remember me, Judge. You used to come to see me behind the scenes."

"Oh, no," exclaimed Magistrate Pool.

"Then you missed a good thing," said Mr. Pastor.

M'KINLEY MONUMENT UNVEILED In City Park of Reading, Pa .- Roosevelt Sends & Letter.

READING, Pa., June 7.-The McKinley Memorial Monument was unveiled in City Park this afternoon. The head of the big parade had just reached the park when a heavy rain fell. Nearly everybody was drenched, but the program was fully observed. President | Roosevelt sent this letter:

I wish I could be present at the unveiling of the McKinley Memorial Monument at Reading. As this is impossible, may I through you extend to those who have initiated and carried on this work and to all the citizens of Reading the profound appreciation we all feel of the erection of this monument. No better service can be rendered our people than by commemorating those Americans who have done real and lasting good to the nation by their career. Renewing my congratulations and the assurance of my appreciation of what has been accomplished, believe me, sincerely yours,

MEDAL FOR POLICEMAN DWAN.

Presented by Mr. McAdoo on Behalf of East Siders for Bravery at Tenement Fire. Patrolman John J. Dwan of the West Forty-seventh street station received last night a handsome gold medal from East Side merchants in recognition of his work at the fire in the tenement house at 105 Allen street Kon March 14, wherein nineteen persons perished. Dwan at the time of the fire was attached to the Eldridge street station and was on post in Eldridge street

Running to the rear of the building and bridging a deep areaway with a board he ripped from a fence, Dwan assisted a number of people from the fire escape to the roof of an outhouse. The board finally broke, throwing Dwan to the basement. In addition to painful burns, he received a double fracture of the collarbone. He was in the hospital for weeks and is still on the sick list.

was in the hospital for weeks and is still on the sick list.

At the request of the donors, the presentation was made by Commissioner McAdoo. A committee, headed by Morris Graubard and as many more East Siders as could crowd into the room, assembled in the Eldridge street station house at the 6 o'clock rollcall. When the outgoing platoon was lined up Dwan, with his left arm in a sling, was called to the front.

In presenting the medal Mr. McAdoo recounted the patrolman's act, which he said he considered as of extraordinary merit. After he became Police Commissioner, he said, he found that meritorious acts on the part of policemen were of so frequent occurrence that it was impossible to give recognition in every case. Dwan's case, said the Commissioner, and its recognition by the people of the district, which greatly pleased him, showed conclusively, he thought, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding, the absence of any racial feeling on the part of the police toward any class of citizens and vice versa. In conclusion the Commissioner said he hoped if any one ever gave him a medal it would be made on the East Side, for he considered the Dwan medal one of the handsomest he had ever seen.

The medal was of solid gold, somewhat

he had ever seen.

The medal was of solid gold, somewhat resembling a captain's shield, suspended by chains from two gold bars and attached to a purple silk ribbon. The top bar bore the patrolman's name. On the second bar was engraved the motto "Honor to whom honor is due."

DEAN SANDERS QUITS YALE. Head of Divinity School Presches Farewell

Sermon-Plans to Meet Deficit. NEW HAVEN, June 7 .- Dean Frank K. Sanders of the Yale divinity school delivered his farewell sermon to the graduating class of the school to-day, when he formally severed his seventeen years connection with the university. He goes from here to a Boston publishing house. He

"I wish to say that no greater attraction calls me from Yale or no disagreement between myself and my colleagues has influenced me in leaving, for the happiest harmony prevails."

The Rev. Edward L. Curtis, professor of Hebrew, announced that the deficit at the end of this year would amount to $30,000, but that the faculty of the school had raised in the last six weeks $12,000 to help meet this. Prof. Curtis said they were going to raise $3,000 more, because if $15,000 was raised a promise had been made that the entire feficit would be wiped out.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

of courtship, an opportunity which Mr. Howells enjoys and develops into a subtly humorous situation.

Golfers who are reading the experiences of "Old Harding, the Railway Magnate" as translated in "John Henry Smith," will be interested to know that the author, Frederick Upham Adams, knows something of the game of which he writes. He is a scratch member of several clubs and has played over the best courses in England and Scotland. While at St. Andrews Mr. Adams played two closely contested games with the famous dean of the game, Old Tom Morris. Despite his eighty-odd years the veteran executes better than many professionals and won the first game against Mr. Adams by a medal score of 82 to 84. Mr. Adams won the game on the succeeding day. The author drives a fairly long and straight ball but excels in work near and on the green. "Our Native Orchids," which will be published on June 15, contains the best drawings of the late William Hamilton Gibson, who was one of the most intimate interpreters of plant life. He completed the series of pictures shortly before his death, leaving notes of the descriptions in such a condition that they could be easily arranged. The book illustrates practically all the specimens of our native orchids

"The Divine Fire" has been ordered for a class in the University of Nebraska as a text book. In this connection it is interesting to recall that it is not so many years ago that a class at Yale studied (among other novels) "The Dolly Dialogues" and The Children of the World."
